A WELL DESERVED FIFTH TERM

Last Saturday night at brief installation ceremonies in the council chamber at the city hall John R. Phillips was sworn in for the fifth consecutive time as city clerk. On April 19th he won reelection handily, topping all of the candidates in the total number of votes received in the municipal election.

Mr. Phillips, as the election returns indicate, is held in high esteem not only by his fellow Democrats but by Republicans as well. He has merited independent support by the excellent way in which he has performed the duties of clerk. His courteous and efficient work is widely recognized.

At the outset of his fifth term, we extend to our veteran city clerk sincere congratulations and our best wishes for many more years of faithful public service.

N the upper story the flat roof had collected the heat of the day and used it to release odors of fresh paint and new wood. Miss Cosgrove forced open the small window, looked out into blackness.

"A long way down." "Three hundred feet," Lilly Warren agreed. "Or at least that's what our genial host told me. You think he's nuts?"

"Hadn't thought of it," Bea said. Lilly Warren swung her bare feet onto the floor, stood up and opened her overnight case. "Don't give me that. You must've thought something. All this share the work and uniforms. And what they said on that stinking boat. Or don't you speak Spanish?"

'No. What did they say?" "Oh-I couldn't get much sense out of it. Just an idea there's something wrong here. But the captain and the mate, his cousin or something, went into more details about you." Lilly looked at Bea critically. "The captain thought you're hot stuff."

"What did he say just as we docked. When the men laughed?" Lilly told her the proverb. "He who travels the wrong way travels the road two times."

BEA COSGROVE awoke from troubled sleep and a dream she refused to remember. She sat up. In the quiet, above the sound of Lilly's breathing, she heard the muffled pad of footsteps. A man's footsteps, slow, careful, rising closer. They came level, paused, went on upward.

Her body was rigid, bathed in perspiration. In the dark, orientation was difficult. And Henry Harding had stalked through tormented dreams before. Suddenly she knew. The bedroom wall formed a side of the tower. There was a stairway inside. Harding, the man of flesh and blood, had listened and walked past. She lay back, fought to relax, and finally slept again. The clothes she had placed so
